Katherine is the Chief Strategy Officer & Vice President for Legislative Policy for the Colorado Hospital Association, where she is responsible for overseeing CHA's public policy priorities and ensuring the Association's more than 100 member hospitals and health systems are well-represented in policy debates at the state and national level.

Prior to joining CHA, Katherine served as the Senior Policy Advisor on Health to Colorado Governor John Hickenlooper, where she was responsible for coordinating the administration's health policy initiatives. She also worked in health law and health policy for public, private, and nonprofit organizations in Denver, and before pursuing a career in health care, she designed, implemented, and evaluated mission-driven programs for foundations and nonprofits in Washington, DC and Colorado.

A consistent theme throughout Katherine's career has been working with organizational and community leaders to solve big challenges. Her experience has shown that the best way to approach problems is to actively engage in collaborative efforts where all parties are committed to identifying and achieving a common vision or objective. She is a passionate believer in the value of interdisciplinary approaches in educational and employment settings, as evidenced by her joint degrees in Law and Healthcare Leadership from the University of Denver (J.D., M.P.S., 2011) and in Religion & Politics and American History from Lafayette College (B.A., 2004).

In addition to her professional role, she serves on several nonprofit and community boards that allow her to engage in building stronger communities in Denver and across Colorado through support of the arts, science, outdoor recreation, and higher education. While she is passionate about her professional and community work, often her favorite moments are spent travelling and relaxing with her husband, Daragh, and two dogs, Zoey and Lia.
